Governor Of Punjab Resigns in New Delhi 'Shake-Up'

By William Claiborne

Washington Post Service NEW DELHI - The governor of the state of Punjao and the state's inspector-general of police resigned abruptly Friday in what the government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said was the beginning of a "complete shake-up" of the state administration.

There has been widespread criticism of the Punjah state government for a breakdown in police intelligence that allowed Sikh separatist guerrillas to stockpile an arsenal of weapons and ammunition in Amritsar's Golden Temple complex prior to the Indian Army's assault on the complex June 5 to flush out Sikh extremists. At least 500 Sikhs and nearly 100 army troops died in the two-day gun bat-tle, according to official casualty figures. The unofficial toll is much

If, for example, there is a 10-percent in crease in unemployment, the result would be a 1.7-percent increase in deaths from cardiovascular disease over a 16-year period. A 1.7percent increase would result to 17,392 deaths from heart disease between the peak of the 1981-82 recession and 1997, Mr. Brenner predicted. Another effect of the recession, a 10-p cent increase in the rate of husiness failures, would result in an additional 5.793 deaths from heart disease, the report said, But because the change in unemployment between July 1981 and November 1982 was 48.6 perceot, according to Mr. Brenner, the adverse bealth effects may be far more damaging than the 10-percent estimates, assuming that the population characteristics have

Then the House voted to raise the limit by the smaller amount, which is enough for the government to cover its bills through August and clears the way for Congress to begin a summer vacation. Raising the debt limit does not mean spending more money, but simply gives the Treasury Department the power to borrow mooey

The Pragmatic Reagan

The pragmatic side of Ronald Reagan was in welcome evidence in his remarks on Wednesday to a carefully chosen audience, a conference on U.S.-Soviet exchanges. He did not alter his unproductive course on the big. political arms-control issues, on which negotiations with Moscow are dead in the water. But, following up his pledge in January to explore "small ways" to improve Washington's working relationship with Moscow, he catalogued his efforts to reopen and expand the network of detente-era contacts and exchanges put on hold by the collapse of detente, mostly in President Jimmy Carter's time.

These connections - in culture, health, environmental protection, space rescue and the like — were conceived first as contributions to good will and then, under President Richard Nixon, as ties of mutual self-interest meant eventually to bind the superpowers even in periods of great stress. Events in Afghanistan and Polano, along with the breakdown of arms control and the dispute over the Sakharovs have frustrated that hope. The theory behind it came under heavy attack from conservatives such as Ronald Reagan. Nonetheless, the president, under election-year pressure to soften the face of his Soviet policy, now says he is eager to resume the old contacts.

There was sense and modesty to his portrayal of what he described as an unresolved policy dilemma. It is essential to object to objectionable Soviet actions, he said - objecting again to Afghanistan to make his point - and to be able in do so by "ways short of military threats," such as cutting off exchanges. Still, he added, "we must be careful in reacting to actions by the Soviet government not to take out our indignation on those not responsible. And that's why I feel that we should broaden opportunities for Americans and Soviet citizens to get to know each other better."

In the immediate aftermath of the invasion of Afghanistan, many Americans might not have been able to muster such detachment and balance. In the current stage of Soviet-American relations, however, Mr. Reagan's conclusion seems appropriate and mature.

Whether Moscow is disposed in pick up the ball is another matter. Mr. Reagan's mellowing comes late in the day and mostly in the atmospheric realm. Soviet attitudes hardened long ago, and the Kremlin leadership is still unseitled. Recent Soviet visitors to Washington have seemed either hostile and skeptical or, in the few better moments, uncertain and tentative. Some American conservatives, in and out of the administration, grumble preemptively that Mr. Reagan is about to give away the store. We do not believe it, but the tone of his policy certainly is changing.

Repressive regimes are rarely capricious in their choice of victims. They often single out prominent dissenters so as to intimidate the less prominent. WASHINGTON — Is Israel facing a strategic-economic crisis? Could a prolonged war, for example, bring the country to the brink of economic collapse?

The governor of the Bank of Israel has warned that the public is increasingly unwilling to lend its money to the government, preferring foreign currency or assets linked to the U.S. dollar. Government deficits, he said, are adding to the country's foreign debt. while the economy lacks the corrective ability to deal with hyperinflation that jumped from a 130-percent annual rate in the first nine months of 1983 to a projected 400-percent rate by the end of this year.

The strains on the Israeli economy are so evident that even Arab diplomats — who in the past refrained from even mentioning Israel by name - have spoken out on the subject. But in Israel, there has been almost no public discussion of what will happen if the party that wins the July 23 election fails to bring the economy rapidly under control.

tn a recent interview. Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad played down the severity of the situation. "A strategic crisis is a situation for which there is a considerable chance of no solution," he said. "In this case, Israel has a major problem, but not a erisis.

In 1978, Israel produced one-fourth of its oil requirements through the Alma oil fields which it discovered in the Sinai. Oil imports in 1978 were $775 million. Since 1979, when the Alma fields were handed over to Egypt as part of the peace accord, Israel has paid $2 billion annually for oil - 20 percent of its total export receipts. (Likud cannot use this as an excuse for the nation's difficulties, said Joseph Rom, a military analyst and Liknd member of the Knesset, noting: "The Likud is portraying peace. with Egypt as its greatest achievement. To justify our economic difficulties in these terms would therefore be impossible.") Yet, from the Israeli perspective, the structure of the debt, (certainly not its magnitude). offers some prospects for recovery.

For unlike the case of Argentina, Brazil or Mexico, which owe about two-thirds of their debt in commercial banks at short-term rates, only 25 percent of Israel's debt originated on a commercial basis. About $3.3 hillion of the inial is short-term debt, and the largest por-tion, $9.2 billion, is owed to the U.S. governby benefactors not apt to call in the debt. And unlike the Latin American case, U.S. loans to Israel were negotiated at fixed interest, to Jerusalem's current advantage.

Israel's debt service was $2.2 billion in 1983, or 26 percent of total exports. American officials say this is high, but not critically so. Government transfer payments to Israel, including restitution monies from West Germamy — $300 million to $400 million annually — and U.S. aid, have averaged $2.8 billion per year over the last decade, adequately covering debt service requirements.

While a dramatic decrease is not expected in the near term, a gradual phasing out of American aid could actually prove a plus. necessitating the adoption of stringent economic measures.

In the meantime, if Israel's economic viability appears to remain intact, the minefields ahead are no less awesome. Shimon Peres summed it up this way: "The situation is so terrible, I have to be optimistic."

The Risks Of Picking 'A Woman'

By Alan Baron

WASHINGTON — The speaker of the House, Tip O'Neill, has predicted that the Democratic nominee for vice president would be either Senator Gary Hart or "a woman."

Mr. O'Neill's blunt language demonstrates again that politicians see women in a different light than they do other groups. Mr. O'Neill, a good liberal, would never say the choice was narrowed to Mr. Hart and "a Jew" or "a Catholic": Jewish and Catholic potential candidates, as well as religious organizadons, would be embarrassed and offended. By contrast, women's organizations and potential female candidates applauded Mr. O'Neill's remarks and are engaged in a major campaign to pres-sure Walter Mondale to select a woman as his running mate.

The campaign could well subvert the best interests of the women's movement as well as those of the candidates it supports.

For while most Americans do not believe a woman should be denied the vice presidency or, for that matter, the presidency because of her gender. neither do they believe she should be elected because of her gender.

Mr. Mondale's vice presidential selection provides him with an important opportunity to demonstrate the two qualities people are looking for most in 1984: courage and vision, The choice of a woman could convey date seemed simply to be pandering.

That bas been demonstrated by, of all people, Ronald Reagan. If the appointment of women to high positions is a valid standard for judging candidates' commitment to women's rights, the current White House surpasses its predecessors. The president has appointed women to the Supreme Court, as United Nations ambassador, and to two key cabinet posts.

But polls show the president running 10 percentage points poorer among women than among men. If that is true on Election Day, it will reflect a dramatic shift in women's politics, since women have consistently voted Republican more than have men for most of this century.

Women's move away from Repub-licanism and toward the Democrats has little to do with partisan ideology or even women's rights issues. Rather, it has in do with basic differences between the values of male and female Americans: Women are much more inclined to place a priority on peace and social stability than men and are much less willing to risk war and social instability. In their first election, women rallied behind Republican Warren G. Harding, who promised "a return to normalcy." Despite his liberalism, it is Mr. Mondale who is perceived by women as the return-to-normalcy candidate this year.

Democrat Selection Process Should Be Less Democratic

By Thomas J. Reese

N EW YORK — If the campaign and participatory caucuses and bay primaries governed (either on a star nomination has proved anything, it was that the Democrats do not know how to pick a presidential candidate. They appear in have forgotten the fundamental purpose of political parties - to pick candidates who can win elections.

The problem with the current selection process is that it is too democratic and not political enough.

There is no inherent or constitutional reason why the candidate must be selected in a democratic process. The people can cast their votes in November, but to demand their attention for a 12-month (or longer) campaign is unrealistic and unneces sary. Certainly a college of political cardinals could have done a better job of picking a candidate than has been done this year. It certainly would not have done worse.

In the quest for perfect democracy, the Democrats have gone overboard with delegate quotas for various de-mographic groups. The logic and jus-tice of special quotas for women, blacks and young people was never clear. Why not give proportional representation to, say, the elderly?

At the same time the Democrats imposed quotas on themselves, they also went overboard with primaries Democratic presidential candidate in and participatory caucuses. The any election since Truman, except for Democrats took the nomination process away from party professionals and allowed anyone to participate have such a big say in the nomina-who called himself a Democrat. Since tion? Iowa and New Hampshire come citizens participate at a higher rate under such procedures, the process fails to reach the democratic goal its supporters exini.

Finally, the "quota" delegates sees were divided among the candidates roughly in proportion to their per-centage of the vote. Such proportion-al representation following an elec-tion is un-American. It is a European disease that should be rejected by the American body politic. U.S. tradition has always been in favor of winnertake-all elections, which force groups to compromise and form coalitions before an election rather than after it. The Democrats need to get rid of primaries governed (either on a star or congressional district level) by th winner-take-all principle. The ideal Democratic conventio would be composed of two equa parts; Half the delegates would be elected politicians or party official and half would be selected by prima ries and caucuses. In such a conver tion all U.S. senators and represent. tives, governors, big city mayor, state legislative leaders and part chairmen would have the right t attend if they were Democrats [an-only these would be able to vote o the party platform). The other half c the delegates would be divide among the states on the basis of population, with added weight given to states that have voted for the Demo cratic nominee in recent elections. -

States that vote for the Democrati nominees deserve special consider ation. It is ridiculous that Iowa and New Hampshire play such an impor tant role in the selection process. Ex cept for 1964, Iowa has not voted Democratic since Harry Truman New Hampshire has not voted Democratic since Franklin D. Roosevelt It is interesting to note that more than half the states that went for Gary Hart had not voted for the 1964. If these states cannot deliver their electoral votes, why should they cuses and primary until after some truly Democratic states have voted.

Would such a convention have selected another candidate? Probably not. Walter Mondale was the favorite lected by these primaries and caucus- of the party regulars, and he ran better in Democrade states. But he would have won the nomination without the bloody, divisive and scandalous battle that we have seen this year. He still would have had a difficult time against Mr. Neagan, but not half as bad as he fnees now. America, a weekly journal of opinion published by Jesuits of the United States. He contributed this comment to The Washington Post.

Warning: This Is Not a Healthy Recovery By Hobart Rowen

W ASHINGTON — On June 20 the U.S. Commerce Department published figures purporting to show that the economy was booming ahead, so fast that Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said he would ask his top aides "to investigate whether the nation has entered a new era."

Five days later the nation got a clear understanding of what the "new era" was all about: interest rates so high that they pose a threat not only to recovery in the United States and political stability among the major Third World debiors, but to Rouald Reagan's re-election

This is not a healthy recovery at all. It will come to an unpleasant end, the timing depending in part on when the Federal Reserve Board quits supplying as much money to financial markets as it is now doing. As the Bank for International Settlements in Basel, Switzerland, said. ast week in its annual report, there are two dangerous possibilities "in-berent in this sort of recovery": a quick, early halt to the expansion, or a new inflation that sustains activity a while longer, but which leads "to a sudden and prolonged depression." Reagan administration officials will not confess how worried they are over a boost in the banks' prime lending rate to 13 percent. It was the fourth balf-point jump in four mouths, to the highest level in almost two years. But they are shaken, because the prime rate and other interest rates clearly have not peaked. The conservative estimate is that the prime rate, driven by the budget deficit and fears of inflation, will hit 14 percent by the end of 1984, and The administration pretends not to understand why interest rates are rising. Officials would have us believe that somehow Wall Street and the bankers are engaging in a massive

"There is no excuse for interest rates being at the level they are right now, other than fear of the future," said Secretary Regan. A few days quotas, reduce the role of primaries later, Mr. Regan acknowledged that the pattern could abort the recovery, and he termed the rise "regrettable." But there is really no mystery: Inbut there is rearly no mystery. Interest rates are rising because the booming economy has led to an explosion in borrowing by business at a time when the Treasury is trying to finance the buge deficit from the same pool of available funds.

What White House officials are really wondering is whether the re-covery will grind to a halt earlier or later. A key factor is that rising interest rates are having less of an impact on housing than would have been true in the past when mortgage rates edged close to 15 percent, as is presently the case. The reason is that an estimated 60 percent of mortgages today are variable-rate mortgages, tied closer to short-term than longterm averages. They start at lower rates than fixed-rate, traditional mortgages. Thus, the impact on bousing is being delayed.

The impact of high interest rates has also been diluted for many middle- and upper-bracket wage earners who can deduct up to 50 percent of interest costs for personal property purchases from their taxes. But the piper must be paid. Uncle Sam gets no 50-percent deductionagainst taxes: For every added tpoint increase in interest rates, says the Congressional Budget Office, the baseline budget deficit increases by about $25 billion after five years and by $30 billion after six years.

In January, when the budget office estimated the 1989 deficit at $248 billion, it made the benign assump-tion that Treasury-bill rates, which averaged 8.6 percent in 1983, would be 8.9 percent in 1984. But these bill rates are already 9.79 percent, and ionger-term issues have soared. At the London economic summit, both President Reagan and Mr. Regan assured other officials that interest rates would start down this summer. Earlier this week, a less ebullient Mr. Regan would only express a hope that the rates might be "shading down." But most others see the trend continuing up. This could give Walter Mondale his best campaign issue.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Calais, Not Annie

As a former officer in the German Panzer-Lehr (Tank Instruction) Division at the end of World War II, I read with great interest Thomas O'Toole's report, "Radio Annie: Nazi Retreat Gave Allies a Propaganda Prize" (June 26).

Let me make two remarks. First nobody in our division ever beard about a Radio Annie. We all listened to the "Soldatensender Calais," which inundated us with jazz and with news whose exactness concerning Wehrmacht moves behind the front line was absolutely stupefying. Second, many Germans anxiously awaited the arrival of the "liberators" coming from the West. During our retreat through the homeland in March and April 1945, all the villages we came through had already raised the white flag, well before the appearance of the first U.S. tank. The Americans did not need a "fifth column.

Sculptor Finds Links To Neanderthal Man

By David Galloway International Herald Tribune

METTMANN, West Germany
— Io the summer of 1856 workers were quarrying limestone in a parrow valley east of Düsseldorf. A dynamite charge exposed a low-ceilioged cave that held a quantity of bones presumed to be those of a bear. The village science teacher, who recognized the remaios of a human skeleton, coneluded that an Old Testament ancestor had been washed into the cave by the great deluge.

Anatomists at Bonn University doubted the Noah's Ark scenario but agreed that the find pointed to "the oldest races of mankind." Rivals contributed their own theories for the origin of Neanderthal man. One identified a drunken Cossack fleeing from Napoleon, another a degenerate Dutchman, while a French physiologist recognized a muscular Celt "of minimal intellectual capacities."

As Neanderthal finds multiplied. together with identification of his stone tools, the Earth and its inhabitants appeared far older than science had ever conceived. That new dimension yawned toward infinity with the publication of Darwin's "Origin of the Species" in 1859, But even those sympathetic to the revo-lutionary bypothesis were reluctant to see the crude caveman as a potential ancestor. He was, at best a regrettable mutation that bad died out about 40,000 years before.

Neanderthal man became a synonym for the slow-witted primitive who spent his days squatting on his haunches and grunting. At mating time he clubbed the first available female and dragged her away by the hair. The degenerate image was only confirmed through the lifesized facsimile prepared by France's leading paleootologist, Marcellin Boule, Based on an arthritic skeletoo reassembled with profligate poetic liceose, the hunched figure bore unmistakable

17th-Century Text Of Grotius Found In Netherlands

The Associated Press

T EIDEN, Netherlands - A Lei-L den university researcher has discovered a previously unknown manuscript of the 17th-century .... for t. Dutch scholar Hugo Grotius, a university spokesman confirmed.

The 40-page manuscript, entitled that man, he si "Meletius" and written around rials at hand. 1610, contains a message of peace, the spokesman said Wednesday. The text, found in the library of an Amsterdam church, declares: "Instead of talking about things that separate us, we should concentrate on what binds us together."

Hugo Grotius, who lived from 1583-1645, is famous for his scholarly works on legal issues, including Costa and Richard Long plastic tubes that connect two steeling "De Iure Belli ac Pacis" (On the Rinke is drawn to the ritual significant vats, each supporting a factory arly works on legal issues, includ-Law of War and Peace).

less textbook illustrations, and only in 1957 was the image seriously chailenged. Today, our ancient ancestor's essential humanity is undeniable. We know that he believed in an afterlife, that he could think conceptually, that he erected shelters and developed serial tech-niques for producing tools. And we have conclusive proof that he was the world's first artist.

Revisionist thinking may not have altered the popular stereotype, but it has made the original Homo neanderthalensis something of a jet-setter. Recently the fragmented skeleton found by quarrymen over a century ago occupied its own seat aboard a Lufthansa flight from Düsseldorf to New York, for an international symposium at the Museum of Natural History.

In his own country, early man's most vocal champion is not a paleontologist but a fellow-artist, 45year-old Klans Rinke. The muscular, strikingly handsome sculptor, a professor at Düsseldorf's Art Academy, speaks enthusiastically of the achievements of his prehis-toric "neighbor." On three conti-nents he has opened exhibitions of his own severe, reductionist works with the provocative declaration: "I am a Neanderthaler."

The affinity is symbolically af-firmed in one of the most remarkable exhibitions of the current German season. Until early August, five of Rinke's monumental sculptures are on view in the Neander valley, while its dustily didactie museum houses an installation that literally pulses with energy. At the entrance to the valley a vast railway clock towers before a deep fissure in the rock, as a reminder of the new concept of buman time established here. Further on, a jagged iron fence surrounds galvanized vats filled with water -Rinke's version of "The Baltic Sea." Its counterpoint is "The Mediterranean," consisting of 100 electric-blue polythene cootainers through which water flows in continuous eddies. Nearby, oo the meadow where stout "Stooe Age" ponies graze, a pair of soaring tripods support plumb-bobs that point to the center of the earth.

Water, gravity, biological rhythms and the act of measuring have consoruted Rinke's syntax since the late 1960s. All, he reasons, would have made sense to his prehistoric forefathers. And though he regards his work as "anthropological," he sees no contradiction in the use of industrial components. "I was born in the Ruhr district," he explains, "As children, the full moon wasn't the moon but the clock at some train station or other, lighted with seon." Like Neander-thal man, he simply uses the mate-disappeared from Western art.

That feeling was confirmed by extended stays in Australia. At Ayers Rock, for centuries the site of secret religious rituals, Rinke discovered a direct corollary to his own mystic-mythic use of water. The nature of the container - rock or plastic or aluminum — seemed inconsequential. But the visitor was also intrigued by the unaffacted beauty of rimal objects. They were soon arriving in Haan by the crateful. Few public museums can approximate the definitive range or curatorial expenses of Rinke's in-tract to Monte Carlo jostled about the great room of the Sporting d'Hiver before the first sale on June 24, a contrast in attitude could be observed. The overwhelming maority walked around the 18th-century furniture in a kind of trance. They did not seem to look at it very closely and tended to chat in rapturous tones. The professionals went from one piece to the oext, stopping to examine purposefully. running a finger over an edge or pulling a drawer to eheck the inside. Two different worlds were confronted, those who gaze, starryeyed, and those who know.

The French decorative arts of the 18th century and furniture in par-ticular raise thorny problems of authentication. This was ideally illustrated by the objects that had adorned the villa El Patio in Cannes.

Florence Gould was more committed to literature than to the visual arts - first editions dedicated to her by the many French writers to whom she played host, Marcel Jou-handeau, Marcel Arland, Roger Martin du Gard, and modern illustrated books started the round of sales. She probably bought her furniture as so many props to set the stage for her entertaining. She had a few ontstanding pieces of antique silver, but seeing the furniture and objets d'art of the Louis XV and Louis XVI periods all laid out in the central room of the sporting palace created no unforgettable impression. A oumber of pieces were jokes.

A hilarious pendule à l'éléphant, the elock dial perched on a porcelain elephant, the elephant balanced on ormolu rockery, and the elock adorned with a cherub and porcelaio roses, was labeled "Louis XV period." Alas, the catalog noted about Florence Gould's furniture that the elephant was a later addition, which did not leave much of the pendule à l'éléphant. The con-trivance was eventually knocked aware of this deficiency, had wisely down at 299,700 francs (about chosen not to dwell oo its magnifi-

Her collection much left of a Louis XV period barometer-thermometer as indicated by the 20,000- to 30,000francs estimate. Had it been genuine, the piece would have been one As the international crowd the of the rarest objets d'art in the sale, auction house had managed to atprice tag. On Monday, it fetched 83,250 frames.

Occasionally, not even discreet hints regarding problems were dropped in the entries. If the expert believed that a pente banquette, or carved wood sofa on cabriole legs, labeled "Louis XV period," had been "shortened" — he mentioned this as a probability — not many professionals shared this view. Despite the excess of sinuous lines on the petite banquette, which gives the impression of dancing a jig, it was sold for 77,700 francs.

By far the most dangerous pieces were those that had a genuine core extensively tampered with. Some are still considered tolerable by even the most famous dealers. Two of them pointed out to me that a bureau plat, or writing table, of the Regence period (1715-25) could not have been born with its tulipwood parquetry and actually retained traces of the original blackwood veneer on the underside. One of them nevertheless bid for it up to 185,000 francs -- saying that it was easy to restore it to its original black veneer. It was eventually sold for 210,900 francs. Another comparable case was offered by a small lady's desk -bureau dos d'âne - with the stamp of Jean-Pierre Latz. Its floral marquetry replaced an earlier facing probably made from Eastern lac-quer panels. It cost 277,500 francs. When it came to a "belle perile lable," with the stamp R.V.L.C. standing for Roger Van der Cruse Lacroix, ("one leg damaged" the catalog entry soberly noted) The three drawers, a Paris dealer explained, were replacements, and the kingwood parquetry had been done up. The item nevertheless sold for a phenomenal 355,200 francs to a private buyer.

Pieces of this ilk are, alas, not unusual. If anything was surprising it is not so much its presence in her house as the lack of star pieces to cence, stressing instead the Florence Gould motif. In keeping with their standard policy in Monte thing might oot be right were more Carlo, they had pegged oo to it veiled. dismissed as fakes by many connoisseurs - but they were made up for by a small number of superb pieces. Two admirable giltwood fauteuils on cabriole legs, uphol-stered in matching Gobelins petit point tapestry, sold for 310,800 francs, one-third of the dubious bergėres. A pair of voveuses chairs on low legs with high backs topped by an upholstered bar to rest one's arms on — made for Versailles were pre-empted by the French national museums' agency. The top price, 4,662,000 francs, was paid for a bureau plat attributed to Latz that is admirable in its architecture if disappointing in its floral ormolu fittings, is to be seen in the Paul Getty Museum, which reportedly acquired it seven years ago for 1.5 million francs from the Paris Right at the end, there came an object of stunning beauty, a bronze horse, 33 inches (86 centimeters) long, Considered by Sotheby's expert to have been made around 1680 in the workshop of Antoine Coysevox, it was the object of mueb incooclusive argument among cognoscenti, including the possibility that it might have once carried a rider. This is one of the great works seen at auction this year. It was not unreasonable, particularly in such a context, at 2,442,000 francs, the price paid by Elizabeth Keck, one of four major

U.S. buyers of French decorative

For the strange consequence of the uncertainty which surrounds much 18th-century decotative art is and sold for 999,000 francs, were that there is no consistent hierarchy in the prices paid for it. On several occasions, the group of Paris dealers that calls itself "Antiquaires à Paris," bought for stock. There were inexpensive buys to be made. A true collector's rarity was a giltwood bergère of the Louis XVI period unusual in structure and beautifully carved. The Antiquaires bagged that for 94,300

Even the seemingly expensive pendule au rhinoceros, a musical clock bought by the Paris trade for 1.1 million francs, will probably be resold at a vasily higher price. It verges on the grotesque, but the rhino is well in tune with the ornate marquetry. A piece by the same whimsy of the Pompadour era, has maker, superb in its marquetry and an excellent pedigree and is unobtainable nowadays.

All told, all was well in the best worlds for the powers that be. Sotheby's skillful salesmanship re-sulted in a thumping success. Their millionaire clients witnessed huge prices being paid at auction that will later justify the equally huge prices charged to them by the trade. And the dealers nevertheless made some good huys.

If some people got stuck with objects that may raise questions in the future, that also has its uses. It is a reminder that one should never buy a lahel, whether it is that of a famous owner or of a stylistic designation. One should look at the object first - and learn how to do is before gambling when the stakes

MOVIE MARQUEE been a worldwide best-seller for more than 60 years. The book has been before the cameras more than once and now emerges in a new version by Gilles Carle with Carole Laure as the maid of the rural Canadian settlement who rejects the call to leave home and remains loyal to her community. Maria, like certain heroines of Shakespeare, sacrifices herself to a noble ideal.

This simple tale of plain country folk in its inexorable marshalling of its incidents has been compared to Greek tragedy, and its classic aus-terity steels it from threatening sentimentality. Carle with his leisurely paced direction retells it faithfully and the venerable favorite casts its bioding spell again.
The story behind it is sufficiently unusual to provide the material for another movie. Its author, Louis Hemon, was sports editor of a Parisian daily (Le Temps, now Le Monde). Afterwards he was posted as a correspondent in London and n an amusiog oovel, "M, Ripois" he wrote of a Frenchman's distaste for Anglo-Saxon ways and York-shire pudding. "M. Ripois" be-came a witty film some years ago with Gerard Philipe as its misplaced Gaul.

Hemon longed for adventure, travel and the great outdoors and; Canada to work on railroad surveys. Then he took off for the Lake John district of Quebec and, while crossing the lake on a ferry, he met a French-Canadian farmer who engaged him - at $8 a month - as a the evocation of the troubled sense hired hand on his property on the of the time he has selected when the banks of the Peribonka River. "Gabriela," a Brazilian product, A return to the old-fashioned way echoes in "Maria Chapte" "Blue Angel" situation. There, in laine," based on a novel that has 1925, a Neapolitan emigré runs a tavern. When he foolishly marries a his doom is scaled. All the men o the quarter have their eyes on the flashy trollop and the barkeep is soon cuckolded. He chases away his bride, but his lust for her is stronger than his sense of honor and when she returns be welcomes her. One is left to imagine the un-happy future of the reunion. Marcello Mastroianni, an excellent player of light romance and low-life melodramas, is thoroughly at home as the jealous, betrayed husband of "Gabriela" as is Sonia Braga as the village siren.

"La Chiave" (The Key) is an Italian film that has kicked up a moral rumpus, having been banned in its homeland. Even in France as "Le Cle," it is forbidden to those under 18 for its vivid depiction of a senile sensualist's erotic fantasies. It is based on a Japanese novel by Junichiro Tanikazi, but its adap-tor-director, Tino Brass (who had a band in the bacchanals of "Caligula"), has shifted its scene to Venice in 1940 when Italy entered World War II and Fascism was still in the saddle. Why the geographic trans-position? Because, Brass told an interviewer, he wanted to show the prudes who condemn his alleged obscenities that the true immoral-

The protagonist is an elderly degenerate (played by Frank Finlay) who insists on photographing his youngish wife (Stefania Sandrelli) in suggestive poses. This grows so tiresome that she has an affair with her prospective son-in-law, which Brass has also graphically photo-graphed. The result is rather arty porno, but Brass, though his scenario is trashy, manages his play-ers, in their less-emotional moments, commendably and reveals a high-grade talent for atmosphere.

Soviet Said to See Low Grain Harvest

MOSCOW — Soviet trading officials have said that Moscow is expecting the 1984 grain crop to be about 180 million metric tons, which would mean the sixth poor harvest in a row, diplomatic sources said Friday.

They said the officials told a visiting delegation from Western Europe that Moscow was basing its import assessments on the 180 million figure and saw no chance of reaching last year's

The official government target for this year is 240 million tons. According to Western experts, the deficit, mainly due to a drought in north Caucasia, would probably lead to an increase in Soviet grain imports in the coming year.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has estimated this year's Soviet grain crop at 190 mil-

From tons.

Earlier this week a Canadian wheat official, William Miner, said at a conference in Ottawa that there were already signs of increased Soviet buying interest in world grain markets.

He said Moscow's import levels, currently around 30 million tons a year, could move closer to 40 million if domestic production fellowed below 100 million tons.

The diplomats said the Soviet officials, including representatives of the state grain purchase agency Exporthhleb, made their comments during a meeting with West European officials and businessmen earlier this month for teller on Societ respire temporal appropriets. talks on Soviet grain transport arrangements through Rotterdam and other ports.

The sources said the Soviet trade officials indicated that a long drought in the fertile north Caucasia region had been a major factor affectmg the size of this year's crop. Soviet newspapers reported earlier this week that there had recently been heavy rains there and Western farm experts said a major disaster appeared to have been averted,

But the diplomats said the rains appeared to have come too late to ensure a healthy, highyield crop.

Soviet grain production has fallen well short of official targets since a record crop of 235 million tons in 1978.

New Wisdom Replaces Old In Thinking on Economics Low Grain Ha

By LEONARD SILK

n economics, the conventional wisdom — the set of princi-ples that respected economists and policymakers believe at any given time - has undergone a radical change in the Stephen Marris, a senior fellow of the Institute for International Economics in Washington and a former economic adviser at the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, recently ticked off some of the changes. In the earlier postwar years, the conventional wisdom held that a government's primary responsibility was to get the level of total demand right — high enough to ensure something close to full employment but not so high as to cause inflation. The assumption was that if a government got the demand side right, supply would take care of itself. But in recent years, this monetary and fiscal policy is more ambiguous.

Reagan's use of doctrine has been reversed, with the new conventional wisdom holding that if govern gets the supply side right, demand will take care of itself. This change, Mr. Marris says, does not refer to the "extreme form of supply-side economics associated with the name of Arthur Laffer" but to the "neoclassical" economic principles pursued in West Germany after World War II.

To get the supply side right, the neoclassicists argue, raise the rate of return on investment by slowing the growth of real wages and lower the real rate of interest by reducing budget deficits.

Neoclassicists would give the Reagan administration a high grade for slowing the growth of wages but a low grade for producing huge budget deficits that raise the real rate of interest.

A second change in the conventional wisdom relates to the relative importance of fiscal policy (manipulating the budget, taxes and deficits) versus monetary policy (regulating the growth of money and credit). The earlier wisdom held that fiscal policy was government's most powerful tool, and monetary policy should be subordinated to it.

Conventional doctrine now asserts the reverse. Today, the Thatcher government in Britain, under its Medium Term Financial Strategy, sets fiscal policy in terms of the need to achieve a given growth of the money supply. Its prime aim is to keep

But the Reagan administration's use of fiscal and monetary weapons is more ambiguous. Monetarists and supply-siders carry on a running battle within the administration, with first one side and then the other prevailing.

Another shift in the conventional wisdom affects efforts to stimulate business investment. The old wisdom held that investment in capital goods depended on what economists called "the Accelerator," the relationship between consumption and the capacity of industry to meet current or expected demands.

capacity of industry to meet current or expected demands.

To increase business capital spending, government would have to increase aggregate demand. Rising consumer demand would be a more important infloence on capital spending than changes in interest rates. Today, the oew wisdom sees interest rates as the dominant force and warns that rising rates imperil investment.

The Reagan administration, determined to hold on to its big tax cuts and even rejecting any relationship between budget deficits and interest rates, seems closer to the old conventional wisdom in asserting that economic growth has set off an upsurge in business investment despite rising interest rates.

Until now, it appears that the old conventional wisdom, as conducted by the Reagan administration, has been working better than the new, as practiced by the Europeans. ----But are the U.S. and European recoveries about to end?

Economists on both sides of the Atlantic are urging the administration to close the budget ga down interest rates, and slow the growth of money and credit to bead off inflation.

But can the new conventional wisdom appears

Neither the old our the new conventional wisdom appears

By Axel Krause

PARIS — Didier Pineau-Valen-cienne, chairman of Creusot-Loire, said Friday that he was "profound-ly shocked" upon learning, live minutes before it was announced on television, that a Paris court was about to place the company in re-

The minister said during the interview that the behavior of the company management in recent talks aimed at restructuring the company was "completely scandal-

Government oegotiators, Mr. Pineau-Valencienne added, had thus rejected his latest proposals, because "their real objective was not to save Creusot-Loire," but to acquire control of other companies in the Empain-Schneider Group under conditions that he said were "incompatible with the legitimate interests of shareholders, large or

NEW YORK - Investment bankers are scramblin

o get into a business they had traditionally shunned the underwriting and trading of "junk bonds."
No fewer than half a dozen major firms, ranging from Dean Witter Reynolds and Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette to Paine Webber and Morgan Stanley, are gearing up separate departments to cash in on the widening interest in these low-rated, high-yielding debt securities. A host of other Wall Street houses that only dabbled in them in the past are scouting for more salesmen, traders and analysts for this area.

The business is dominated by Drexel Burnham Lambert. Its prowess in expanding the market for these bonds has placed it in the upper tier of managers in the total debt and comity underwriting ranking.

"Junk bonds" is a Wall Street nickname that originally described the debt securities of troubled companies. It now is applied to bonds of oewer companies as well. The bonds are rated at less than investment grade -Ba or lower by Moody's or BB or lower by Standard The trading of such bonds is fraught with risk as

The market for so-called junk bonds is in its infancy and growing fast. Any ootable flops could have wide ripple effects, it is feared. About 150 institutional investors oow own such bonds, including 25 mutual funds and 30 corporate pension funds.

High yields are the attraction. At present, most of these boods carry yields of 16 or 17 percent, compared

Murdoch Buys 5.6% of St. Regis As 'Investment'

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Companies led by Rupert Murdoch, a publisher, have spent more than $65 million to purchase 5.6 percent of St. Regis Corp. is shares outstanding, calling it an iovestment, according to documents filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In an unusual declaration; the companies ruled out "greenmail," which occurs when a company pays a price above market value for a block of stock in order to stop a takeover attempt, but does oot make the offer to all stockholders. In the filing Thursday, Mr. Murdoch and his associates stated that "under no circumstances would ibey accept any offer from the company to repurchase such stock un-less the same offer were made to all shareholders of the company."

At a meeting with St. Regis on Tuesday, Mr. Murdoch expressed reservations about the company's planned purchase of Colonial Penn Group, an insurance company. But William R. Haselton, chairman, said St. Regis would complete the

3 U.S. Brokers Raising Rates To Individuals

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Three of Wali Street's largest retail brokerage firms, citing rising costs and declining trading volume, said Thursday that they will raise commissions charged to individuals. The increases follow those insotuted at other big firms recently.

According to spokesmen for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith; E. F. Hutton & Co., and Paine Webber Inc., next week their firms will follow the lead of Shearson Lehman/American Express Inc., Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. and Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc.

The increases are the first in three to four years. In some cases they will pinch small investors hardest.

At Merrill Lynch, the average price increase will be 4 percent. At Hutton commissions will increase an average of 5 per-cent. At Paine Webber, there will be an across-the-board increase of 1.35 percent on stocks, as well as a 2.55 percent rise in commissions on options.

Last January, Shearson raised its commissions by an average of 4 percent.

Peugeot Says Its Loss Widened During 1983

PARIS — Peugeot SA said Friday that its consolidated loss widened to 2.59 billion francs ($301.34 million) in 1983 from a loss of 2.15 billion francs the year before.

Peugeot's Automobiles Peugeot subsidiary earned 113 millioo francs in 1983, in contrast to a 1,29billion-franc loss, on revenue of 45 billion francs, up 17 percent from 38.3 billion francs. The Automobiles Citroen unit's loss was 500 million francs in 1983, narrower than the 1.3 billion francs of a year earlier. Revenue was 24.6 billion francs, up 22 percent from 20.2 billion francs.

Despite GM's recent record profits, its stock has been trading between three and four times earnings, which is considered low. The outomaker has more than $9 billion on hand as a result of the recent sharp upturn in auto sales, Said Maryann N. Keller, an investment adviser at Vilas Fischer Associates: "Firs) of all, EDS is a self-supporting, free-standing and growing business." In addition, she aid, it fits into the pattern of buying technology and expertise that has been demonstrated in GM's robot-making joint venture with Fanuc of Japan and its arrangement with Toyota to produce subcompact cars in California.

David Healy, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert, said EDS should help General Motors "clean up its data systems within itself." But Mr. Healy said he doubted that the acquisition would have a major impact on GM's fi-nancial outlook. He noted that EDS's revenue this year of about $800 million were about 1 percent of GM's total. One of the major beneficiaries of the takeover, which is to be paid for with a combination of cash and a new issue of GM stock to be known as Class E, will be Mr. Perot, who owns about 45 percent of Electronic Data's stock. He will receive $900 million to $1.1 billion for his

2% Rise in Aid Set For Third World

PARIS - Developing countries will get about 2 percent more financial aid in real terms from leading Western donors this year but it will still not be enough to meet their needs, according to a senior Western aid official.

BACK in the Eisenhower years, "The Man in the Gray Flannel Smit" became a catchword as common, as useful and as misleading as another novel's title, "The Ugly American," was to become in the '60s.

In each of these cases, a novelist invented what he considered an essentially sympathetic character, a man struggling with some success to correct abuses that he saw in our society. And the public (which obviously reads catchy titles more thoroughly than the books they adom) attached the term to the abuses being fought rather than the man who was fighting them. "The Ugly American" came to repre-sent heartless imperialism, though the ugly Ameri-can in the book was anything but a heartless imperialist. "The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit" embodied a robotlike conformity to the values implied in another catch phrase, "Madison Avenue," although Sloan Wilson's character, Tom Rath, struggled against those values and remained, as a result (in his

Wilson went on to write a dozen other novels. One or two ("A Summer Place" and perhaps "A Sense of Values") may stir some memories among readers, but gray flannel is what lodged in the public mind. "Tailors offered to measure me for free gray flannel suits," Wilson recalls in an introduction to a trade paperback edition of the book, evidently aimed at the textbook market. "Executives who had worn them since prep school started showing up for work in sports clothes to prove the freedom of their spirit. . . Intellectuals, hippies and flower children began to consider him not a protester against conformity, but an arch example of it, the squarest guy in the world. He was attacked as a proponent of materialism, bad thinking or no thinking at all." Now, our hero is back in a sequel, and he tries to establish right from the beginning that he is not what people have thought him to be for nearly 30 "My name is Tom Rath. There have been times when that name sounded better to me than it looked on paper because wrath in various forms was boiling up in me. . . Men in gray flannel suits are supposed to speak softly and carry a big pencil, but I still thought of myself wryly as the last angry public relations man." Is that point about the name firmly registered now? Most people missed it the first time around.

The trouble is that in the sequel, as in the original, Tom Rath still goes through experiences that resonate curiously with those of a large segment of Middle American peers in his age group. In the first book, it was the struggle of raising a family on an inadequate salary, the genteel squalor of a home in suburban Connecticut that was not quite good enough, the insecurities of a job where he produced nothing more tangible than words and ideas things whose value could be determined only by the whims of superiors he had trouble respecting. This was complicated by memories of filthy, confused violence in World War II - memories of killing men, not all of whom were enemies, and adulterous adventures on what he had thought was the brink of

In the sequel. Tom's story leaps from the Eisenhower to the Kennedy years. He allows hope to creep into his life, inspired largely by the brilliant, vigorous young president, and he launches into a middle-aged, middle-class variation of the complex experience of the '60s. He has an affair with a younger woman who uses a four-letter word to describe the most transcendent of all experiences. and somehow it develops into love. His marriage disintegrates. His job is endangered, and be finds himself wondering. "What agency would hire a 43-year-old specialist in writing dull speeches about mental health?" His children start going off in directions be cannot understand or accept; in one episode, he nearly shoots a supposed burglar only to discover that it is a young punk sneaking to a nocturnal rendezvous in his daughter's bedroom. His world is shattered by Kennedy's assassination. Like many who came to the midlife crisis in the '60s, be reexamines the basic premises of his existence and makes a few revisions.

Rather improbably but not without justice, Sloan Wilson finally gives Tom Rath a happy ending. The poor fellow deserves it; in spite of misunderstandings, he has given distinguished service both to his

A Hard Road Back to No. 1 Navratilova said she felt more year, I weigh the pluses and the ninuses win, I'd By David Remnick

LONDON - Billie Jean King knows how it leels when a supreme talent erodes, slowly, but inevitably. She has finally given up play-ing singles at Wimbledon and watches the lawn frolics from a King is observing her successor's slow fade. She believes that even though Chris Evert Lloyd is the second seed at Wimbledon this year and No. 2 in the world, she does not have much chance of upsetting Martina Navratilova.

"It's really very simple," King said. "Chris just isn't as good as she used to be. That's the problem. She doesn't hit the ball as hard and she doesn't play the sort of style that gives Martina much trouble. She doesn't seem to believe in herself the way she used to. It's pretty hard to believe in yourself when you lose to the same person all the time.

"To be honest, no one has the game to beat Martina. The closest anyone comes is someone like Kathy Jordan, who hits the ball hard and comes to the net."

Navratilova agrees that Evert's game oeeds some changes. "For Chris to be on top again she would have to be more of an aggressor, hit her first serve in for some free points," Navratilova said. "Chris is great at the net, a lot better than most. I don't know why she doesn't come in more."

natural serve-and-volley players, such as Hana Mandlikova, Pam Shriver and Jordan, have the best chance of challenging her for a grass court title.

After her first-round victory Monday, Evert admitted that her concentration is oot what it should be. Berween 1974 and 1983, she won three times at Wimbledon, six U.S. Opens, five French Opens, an Australian Open and five Italian Opens. Though she is only two years older than Navratilova, Evert has endured the pressures, as well as tasting the pleasures, that a decade of perfection provided.

"Martina will occd about five more years at this level to equal what Chris has accomplished," King said, "Even if Chris never gets past No. 2 again, what difference does it make? She has that record. But it's next to impossible for her to get on top of the pile again."

Evert has tried to keep pace with the extraordinary impact Nevratilova has had on women's tennis. She has tried, in effect, to play a

"I still think I'm up there, even though I'm No. 2," said Evert. The Hana Mandlikovas and Pam Shrivers lose all the time. "I'm not even thinking about re-

"I think Chris is probably going about it wrong," Shriver said. "She is the best base-line player ever, but I've heard her coach tell her to get to the net more. But how long has Chris been playing? How can she change? Martina's done it to her.

Martina's made her feel she has to

"It's really strange what Martion's play has done to the women's tour," King said, "Everyone seems so paranoid to walk on the court with her. I don't think most of the top 10 players have the attitude they need to win. When I was playing up there, you had Margaret Court, Virginia Wade, Ann Jooes, myself and a bunch of others all going at each other.
"People tend to forget so quick-

SAN FRANCISCO — After a while it begins to feel relentless. Here come the national news magazines, and the subur-ban dailies, and the eastern papers, and Cable News Network and the "CBS Morning News"; here come Brussels and Tokyo television men, wondering if she might spare them a moment or two. Here comes the AM radio man, following her even into a late-night television appearance, asking about it again. "Aw, I've gone into that," the mayor says. "Enough's enough."

She grins, shrugs the radio man away, turns to see Dan Rather on the television pressing Walter Mondale for details about his running mate.

"Well," Rather says huffily, "if you won't tell us her name ---And Dianne Feinstein starts laughing so hard she nearly doubles over. After a two-hour visit at his home in North Oaks, Minnesota, where Walter Mondale interviewed Feinstein about her possibilities as Democratic candidate for the vice presidency of the United States, he said she was "a symbol of the very best in America." It was a laboriously publicized visit, like nearly everything connected with the present fuss over the vice presidency. "My youngest stepdaughter, Eileen, spent the night with me." Feinstein said recently, "and she said to me. 'Do you think anythine'll happen?' And I said, 'No. But it's really an honor to be on that short list." Feinstein, 51, is the mayor of an odd, fickle, 700,000-person city, a woman shoved into office by a double murder, elected to a standard term, subjected to an unyieldingly nasty recall campaign, upheld by a vasi majority of the voters and ushered nearly without opposition into a second mayoral term.

She is tall, broad-shouldered, an athlete softened by the years, and she has nice crinkles around her eyes. People think she has no sense of humor. She has admitted to watching "Dynasty" when she is tired. Her husband, whom she married four years ago after she was widowed in 1978, climbs mountains and runs great distances. Fein-stein is coolly moderate in her political

By mid-July, when 25,000 people arrive in San Francisco for the Democratic National Convention, she will arguably have become the most celebrated mayor in the United States.

direct, the regular Monday reports. The mayor quizzed, nodded, made notes on small cards in a large leather volume. She stein say is this: That San Francisco is asked the Housing Authority director for a due date, in writing, on a new housing project — "One that you are prepared to bring in unmanageable numbers of com-stake your career by." Feinstein said. She smiled as she said this, but the humor laid a very thin veil over the Feinstein managerial style: a fervor for order, a direct involvement in the specifics of city government, an attention to detail that has been the pride and despair of her staff.

So there was laughter in the room, but it was not the kind of laugh George Moscone would have gotten. George, as he is fondly remembered, was such a different sort of mayor, a man whose administrative abilities were greatly exceeded by his charm. Minorities liked him; women liked him; people who had traditionally been kept from power liked him.

The day he was shot to death, in a corner of his office, it was Feinstein who found the body.

The city was numb already after the nestown deaths, and when a week later, the news came from City Hall - that the conservative former supervisor Dan White, ostensibly in a rage over Moscone's failure to give him back the supervisor's seat White had quit, climbed through a base-ment City Hall window and shot to death both Moscone and the gay supervisor Harmuters; that the city is approaching Manhattan in its wildly expensive housing with one-bedroom apartments renting for $800: that Feinstein is too chummy with the developers and financiers whose names are generally invoked whenever people cry that the city is economically shoving out its own middle class. They say that Feinstein is a disappointingly staid politician. Hardly anybody argues about the list of Feinstein accomplishments - the crime rate is down, the city government puris along under closely monitored new management techniques, the local unemployment rate dropped to 7.2 percent this year, the downtown shopping area thrives, the city just weighed in with a $130-million budget surplus, and last week, in a massive urban celebration culminating two years of costly underground repairs, the cable cars came back. So when Feinstein learned in early 1983 that some Haight-Ashbury activists had begun circulating petitions for her recall, her staff dismissed them as crackpots.

"And then — fwooom," Feinstein said, laughing, her arm arcing down in a great imaginary cascade of paper. "In came the pentions!" City law required just over 19,000 signatures to order a recall election; the petitions came in with nearly twice that many. In April 1983, seven months before the regularly scheduled mayoral race. Fein-stein faced a special election to see whether she could keep her job. Her friends uniformly said the recall nearly took her apart. "It was like a knife was going in," Feinstein said. But she won the recall, a devastating victory, with 81.2 percent of the vote.

The young Dianne Goldman was the only Jewish student at the Convent of the Sacred Heart high school, went to Stanford University, abandoned the idea of becoming a doctor like her father, and graduated to work in criminal justice. Then Governor Edmund G. Brown appointed her to the California Women's Board of Terms and Parole, Feinstein married, had a daughter, was divorced from her husband; in 1962 she married Bertram Feinstein, a brain surgeon who was 19 years older than she

Mayor Feinstein

Feinstein was in her third term as a San Francisco supervisor. Feinstein took a deep breath, "You know, what I really learned - I think the human things that people go through are by far the most important things in life. And they're the most important things to respond to."

That is what people say about the private Feinstein, even if they complain about her policies in the next breath: She is passionately loyal, capable of sudden wicked humor and possessed of a fierce, practical generosity in times of personal crisis. A city sheriff's office employee still remembers from many years ago the way Feinstein, who had intercepted the call bringing terrible news, took her out for a drive to tell her with infinite gentleness that the woman's husband had died of n heart attack.

"It keeps the human perspective that I really need to keep in this job, because the office part of it drives you to distraction. You know, you feel yourself very tough and hard —

Feinstein punched the air, her voice going mean, "And I hate it," she said. "Just to just to move - the most intransigent thing is a bureaucracy."

And if you are a woman, you must, of course, yell twice as hard and look twice as mean, until after a while they get used to you, Feinstein said. If you have been mayor for 51/2 years by then and if your name is mentioned in the same sentence as "vice president" by people not simply out to flatter, then the pressure to be tough starts to ease off. "I'm finding it less and less now," she says. "I think I've made the
